A Literary Curiosity.

The poem below, which was first published in the Knickerbecker magazine, is made up of single lines from twenty-five English and American poets, beginning with Longfellow and ending with Byron. It would take some time to affix each writer's name to his line or lines, though the majority are, of course,

"Pearls at random strung.

By future poets shall be sung."

The night has come, but not too soon ; Westward the course of empire takes its way :

Foreign Miscellany.

A YEAR'S MISSIONARY WORK IN JAPAN.-Rev. D. Thompson, American Missionary at Yokohama, writes that the year has been prosperous. Good progress has been made in learning the langaage, mode of thought and general character of people. In proportion as their ability to teach is improved, their opportunities of communicating instruction are increased. Dr. Hepburn has kept his dispensary in operation with much good will of the people; but he is obliged now to be absent some months at Shanghae to print the the dining room of that establishment between Japanese Dictionary. A number of promising pupils are under instruction and making good progress. The people show less distrust and hostility, and there is a probability that political changes will be more favorable to foreign inter-

Female Suffrage in England.—John Stuart Mill, in a recent letter to a Reform meeting at York, reminded the reformers that the principle that it is unjust that the great bulk of the nation should be held amendable to laws, in whose making they had no voice, cannot stop at residential manhood suffrage, but requires that the suffrage be extended to women also. He expressed the hope that the workingmen of England will show the sincerity of their principles by being willing to carry them out in favor of others besides themselves. The London Times sharply attacks Mr. Mills' theory of suffrage for women, and bittérly says: "A lunatie may be very ill used, but that is no reason for putting a sword into his hand. A fool may be plundered of his money as fast as he gets it, but that is no reason for giving him more. So, whatever a theory may require, we should be doing women more harm than good by giving them political power."

Considering that the Sovereign of Great Britain is a woman, it would have been expected that the Times could have found other means of expressing its disapproval of female suffrage than comparing women with lunaties and fools, in this case, however, it seems to have preferred strength to elegance. The last census in Great Britain showed that there were in Victoria's Kingdom 14,459,314 males and 15,476,090 females, so that the full application of Mr. Mill's theory would place the whole government in the hands of the women. We have never heard that the women of Great Britain feel themselves greatly wronged because they have not had the privilege of voting, and the reformers will do quite as already been accomplished to show that the future well to stick to the practical main question as to wander off after theoretical side issues. The great question now is whether the men of Great is not only for us in the Atlantic States, but for Britain shall have any voice in the government. After that question has been satisfactorily settled. it will be time enough to talk about the ballot

THE REPORTED CAPTURE OF MAXIMILIAN. There is an unconfirmed rumor by telegraph, to the effect that Miximilian has been captured. The report comes via New Orleans. It is generally discredited, although there is no reason why it may not be true. Our latest previous advices left him in a very preenrious condition at Queretaro. Every effort he made to effect an escape from that beleagured citadel had failed, and the Liberals, who were in considerable strength on the outside, felt sure of their victim. Presuming the statement to be correct, the question arises, "What disposition will be made of Maximilian by Escobado?" That Mexican Liberal General has just been the hero of a most sanguinary slaughter at San Jacinto, and there is great fear, if the unfortunate Emperor falls into his lands, that his fate will be equally summary and cruel. The interposition of our Government has been used in his behalf; and it may be res- the telegraph will be shortened, it is impossible pected. It will certainly have its due influence to fortell.
